ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A method of washing contaminants from a coated surface of a material transports the material up an inclined substantially planar surface and introduces wash solution at the upper part of the planar surface. The planar surface incorporates substantially non smooth resistance means which provides a resistance to downward flow of the wash solution and has a capacity for holding wash solution which is in excess of that of a substantially smooth surface.

5